

About the 2022/23 Michael Gordon Journalism Fellowships

The Gordon Fellowships is a national program to enable social justice journalism. It is named in honour of Michael Gordon, the respected former Age political editor who passed away in February 2018.

The fellowships provide annual grants to a total of $30,000 to fund reporting projects in areas including Indigenous affairs, migration policy, human rights and international development.

The program is open to all journalists, photographers and videographers working with mainstream Australian news organisations across all media, as well as freelance journalists and accomplished journalism students.

We encourage applications from journalists who identify as being of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander heritage as well as journalists who identify as being from culturally and linguistically diverse backgrounds.

Applications open until 1 November 2022

- ◆ Individual grants of up to $10,000 available for projects
- ◆ The program is open to journalists, photographers and videographers with mainstream Australian news organisations, freelance journalists and accomplished journalism students. We encourage applications across all media.
- ◆ Applicants submit a project proposal addressing the selection criteria and provide a budget for their project.

The Fellowships are supported by

COPYRIGHTAGENCY
CULTURAL FUND

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB
OF AUSTRALIA

The MPC also thanks Robyn Carter
for supporting this program